

Jacques Coertze is a PhD student and part-time lecturer in Information Technology at the Nelson Mandela Metropolitan University (NMMU) in Port Elizabeth, South Africa. He has an acute ambition for information technology, information security and its proper governance, which compels him to deliver innovative solutions to industry by means of research in the field. Publications to date include those in the field of information security, its proper management and governance with a primary focus on SMMEs, developing countries and the challenges that they face.